

The NewStandard A Third of U.S. Jobs Pay 'Low Wages'

RECENT NEWS

- NYCLU Slams New York City for 'Over-Policing' of Schools
- Activists Seek Alternative Model to 'Neo-Liberal' Trade Pacts
- Study Finds Bisexual Health Awareness, Resources Lacking
- Diverse, Dispersed Protests to Mark Iraq War's Fourth Year

- Health & Environment B1
- Liberty & Security C1
- Work & Money D1

- TNS HOME
- SIGN UP
- LOG IN
- CONTACT
- DONATE
- ABOUT
- ARCHIVE
- RADIO SHOW

by Jessica Azulay

Mar. 19 – A new analysis has found that some 44 million American jobs – about one out of every three positions in the United States – pays $11.11 per hour or less.

The report, published by researchers at a think tank called Inclusion, also says those jobs are less likely than higher paying work to include benefits like health insurance, retirement accounts or paid time off. Inclusion is affiliated with the progressive Center for Economic and Policy Research.

According to the report, the median wage for men in the United States is $16.66 per hour, which means that half of men make more than that wage and half make less.

The researchers defined low-wage jobs as those paying less than two-thirds of the median male wage.

"In short," wrote the researchers, "our preferred definition of low-wage work is any job that pays substantially less than the job held by a typical male worker."

The researchers' analysis of US Bureau of Labor statistics found that the occupation with the most low-wage jobs is retail sales. Of the 4.3 million retail-sales workers in the country, half made less than $9.20 per hour, according to the report. Low-wage jobs are also concentrated in the fields of food preparations and serving; building and groups maintenance; healthcare support; personal care; and farming, fishing and forestry occupations.

The economists plotted low-wage

ONLINE SOURCES

"Understanding Low-Wage Work in the United States" Inclusion

Jessica Azulay is a staff journalist.

Recent contributions by Jessica Azulay:

- GE Contaminated Rice Turns up in Mexican Markets 3/15/07
- U.S. Slams Foreign Rights Abuses, Fails to Note Own Complicity 3/8/07

MORE →

RELATED STAFF BLOG ENTRIES

- 'The Rest of Us'

TOOL BOX

-  Email to a Friend
-  Print-friendly Version
-  Respond
-  Add to My Morning Paper

Sign up to receive NewStandard headlines and extras by e-mail weekday mornings!

Your privacy is strictly respected.

PREVIOUS/RELATED ITEMS

- Activists Find Momentum Lifting Wage Floors (Jun 13, 2006)
- Wealthiest Americans' 'Share' Soared in 2004 (Jul 14, 2006)

Promotional Tools

Share this article with the world using these popular services!

STAFF BLOG

PROMOTE

SYNDICATE

CORRECTIONS

WORK & MONEY

- Activists Seek Alternative Model to 'Neo-Liberal' Trade Pacts
- Unprotected by Laws, Domestic Workers Face Exploitation
- Grad Students Appeal to U.N. for Union Rights

work over time since 1979, and found that in the late 1990s low-wage jobs began paying more until 2001, when their wages were up by 5 percent over 1979's figures. But, according to the report, since then, low-wages have fallen back to almost the 1979 levels.

© 2007 The NewStandard. All rights reserved. The NewStandard is a non-profit publisher that encourages noncommercial reproduction of its content. Reprints must prominently attribute the author and The NewStandard, hyperlink to <http://newstandardnews.net> (online) or display newstandardnews.net (print), and carry this notice. For more information or commercial reprint rights, please see the TNS reprint policy.

 Email to a Friend  Respond

MY MORNING PAPER

customized print-outs of NewStandard articles